New Dietary Ingredients

An Emord & Associates Teleconference

What Rules Govern New Dietary Ingredients?

Many dietary supplement companies confront the issue of whether an ingredient scheduled for use in a product is a “new dietary ingredient” (NDI) and therefore not legal to sell without FDA non-objection to an NDI submission. In recent years the FDA has elevated the level of proof required to establish that a new dietary ingredient is safe and therefore legally saleable. In this informative teleconference, the attorneys at Emord & Associates will explain:

1. The definition of a “dietary ingredient”
2. Grandfathered dietary ingredients
3. When a New Dietary Ingredient (NDI) submission must be made to the FDA
4. The scientific evidence required to support an NDI submission
5. When NDI submission need not be made to the FDA
6. Whether NDI’s granted to one party are useable or transferable to another

To participate, call Emord & Associates, P.C. (202-466-6937) or email us at jemord@emord.com. The fee for participation (payable by credit card) is $225. A pass code and phone number for the June 19th program will be supplied to you upon paying the fee.
